Yes. This is a DHS issue. We have been in contact with DHS about the size limits on CPP classrooms but that doesn't appear to be the focus of her question.

I would have her contact DHS.

Hi Floyd,

Is this a DHS thing? Or do we have a response for this reporter?

Subject: preschool capacity

Hey, Jeremy Meyer:
I hope this find you well. TIna Griego here. Quick question related to strike. A couple of preschool operators told us that the state is waiving teacher:student ratios during the strike so that students affected by the strike would have a place to go. The two we spoke to have decidedly mixed feelings about this. A capacity question.
Can you please clarify what, if any, policy that state is implementing around its preschool providers during the DPS strike? Chalkbeat did report this about a week ago: "Officials from the Department of Human Services said they talked with Denver district leaders about waiving two state preschool rules during a strike — the class size cap of 20 students and the teacher-student ratio requirement of 1-to-10. The waivers would only be granted for classrooms with a qualified staff member, such as a paraprofessional, and another district staff member who has the background checks and training required by state and federal law."

Thanks,
Tina
